JOHN SHELL, of Leslie County,

Kentucky is the oldest man in the world. Records confirm his statement that he is past 131 years old. He was 73 years old when the Civil War began and was rejected for service because of his age. His descendants number into hundreds. The marionette show, of ancient origin, exists in almost every country with some variations. Japan has them too, and hundreds of people find joy and amusement in watching the little figures dance to the tune of an American phonograph. A novel idea has been devised by Little Jean Margaret Tel-aak's parents who are vaudeville performers. They carry Jean in a wire cage with a cover on it. A kiddie tournament in which the brave Sir Knights, whose emblazoned shields bespeak mighty deeds of valor, make deep obeisance from their prancing chargers to the good Queen Youth and her court, and some actual advertisements appearing in metropolitan dailies complete this issue.
